Chrysler to buy American Motors

DETROIT (AP)—Chrysler Corp. and France's Renault have signed a letter intent under which the No. 3 U.S. automaker would buy ailing American Motors Corp., the companies said Monday.

Under the plan, Chrysler would buy all outstanding shares in AMC, the fifth-largest U.S. automaker, the companies said.

"This is an agreement in principle. Much work remains to be done before the deal is complete," said Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca.

French government-owned Renault holds a 46.1 percent interest in AMC, which in fourth-quarter 1986 earned its first profit in two years.

Chrysler still must reach a specific agreement with Renault, obtain government approvals and obtain approval of the AMC board of directors, Iacocca said.

"For Chrysler, the attractions are Jeep, the best-known automotive brand name in the world; a new, world-class assembly plant at Bramalea, Canada; and a third distribution system giving us access to a larger market," he said.

For AMC, he said, the attractions are "an integration with, and access to, a broader product line. For Renault, continuing presence and distribution capabilities in the United States and Canada."

AMC initially would remain a distinct Chrysler subsidiary and the AMC-Jeep-Renault dealer organization would remain independent. Chrysler eventually would absorb AMC's product development and manufacturing operations, Iacocca said.

The letter of intent allows Chrysler and Renault to examine future joint product development for both North American and worldwide sale.

"This transaction is an important step in the Renault restructuring which will permit Renault to continue its export program in the United States," said Raymond H. Levy, Renault's chief executive officer.

Chrysler would buy Renault's interest in AMC for $200 million in Chrysler notes along with a contingent payment based on AMC future profits and sales which could range from zero to $350 million, Chrysler said.

Trustees to hear beefs about dorm food plan

By Paul Parker
Daily Campus Staff

Students can voice their opinions on small-dorm food service Thursday at a Board of Trustees public hearing.

The hearing, at 7 p.m. in the Bishop Center, will focus on proposed changes to the Associated Student Commissaries constitution and by-laws.

The proposed changes transfer authority for small dorm kitchens from the students who live in each dorm to a central university administration.

The director of the Department of Student Commissaries will become responsible for the hiring of full-time, paid kitchen staff and student stewards, if the measure is approved by the trustees at their meeting Friday.

In the current system, stewards are elected by the dorm and hire and fire the full-time, paid kitchen staff. Stewards also hire waiters and waitresses. The chefs will take over hiring waiters and waitresses if the proposal is passed.

The proposal also would set a standard board fee for all small dorms instead of the varying fee determined by individual dorms.

An ad hoc committee appointed by Carol Wiggins, vice president for student affairs and services, drew up the proposed changes, based on a study which cited problems including the following:

- There are no skill standards for chefs
- Training opportunities for stewards are lacking
- ASC is in violation of numerous public health standards
- Evening meals are not offered at convenient times for all students
- Some menus are of questionable nutritional value
- The growing practice of chefs purchasing ready-made meals has increased costs to students
- A clear responsibility for maintenance of health standards is not apparent

Survivors mourn ferry victims

By Raf Casert
Associated Press Writer

ZEEBRUGGE, Belgium—Survivors and victims' relatives joined in an ecumenical prayer service Monday for those who died when water rushed through a British ferry Friday night and turned it on its side.

Salvage crews prepared to right the partially submerged vessel so scores of bodies can be recovered from inside. The Herald of Free Enterprise, which capsized while leaving Zeebrugge harbor for Dover, rests starboard-side-up on a sandbar.

More than 130 people are thought to have died in the shipwreck.

Olivier Vannesta, governor of West Flanders province, said one more survivor had been located: someone who escaped the disaster but did not report to authorities immediately.

That left 81 people still missing and presumed dead. Vanneste said 409 people survived and 53 bodies had been recovered.

Paul Ellis, spokesman for the Townsend Thoresen line that owns the ship, announced a plan, beginning Monday night, to return bodies to Britain by ferry. Most of the dead were British.

Transport Minister John Moore of Britain said Monday in Parliament that a public inquiry will be conducted into the disaster and the government will donate 1 million pounds ($1.6 million) to the survivors and families of the dead.

Belgian officials said a panel of maritime law experts had begun an investigation.

"All of the survivors, including the crew, have been questioned," said Philippe van Bale, spokesman for investigation magistrate Arthur Doest.

Ship's boatswain Marc Stanley was reported to have said the accident was his fault because he left the front loading doors open, but van Bale said he "denied under questioning he ever made that statement." Stanley returned to Britain on Sunday night.

Bodies were laid out in rows of coffins at a makeshift morgue in Zeebrugge's sports center.

Preliminary identification was done at the naval base adjacent to the harbor. More relatives arrived Monday to identify their kin.

Officials said relatives had identified 34 bodies. Police Chief Roger de Bree said the others would be moved to a hospital for further identification work.

If all 81 missing are declared dead, the final toll would be 134, by far the worst accident of modern times on the ferry runs between Britain and the continent.

Government officials to be at missile hearing

BRIDGEPORT (AP)—Representatives from the Central Intelligence Agency and the National Security Council will attend a hearing Tuesday as the government presses its case against a Pakistani national accused of illegally exporting missile parts to Iran, a federal prosecutor said Monday.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Holly Fitzsimmons said the CIA and NSC officials would be in Bridgeport federal court to respond to defense attorney requests for documents on U.S. arms shipments to Iran.

Arif A. Durrani, a Pakistani arms dealer, has maintained that he was part of the government's efforts to exchange arms for American hostages held in Lebanon when he was arrested October 3, 1986. The 37-year-old Durrani operated an aircraft parts business in Westlake Village, Calif.

Durrani's attorneys asked Monday that his trial in Bridgeport federal court be delayed until the CIA and NSC respond to defense subpeonas for documents. Jury selection had been set to start Monday, but was postponed until next Monday.

Judge T.F. Gilroy Daly recessed Monday's hearing on the subpeonas until Tuesday after listening briefly to arguments.

Fitzsimmons asked the court to reject the subpoenas, contending they were too broad and saying it would take six months to search for all documents. But she amended her argument after Durrani's attorneys submitted a list for only 14 documents. She said she would have to find out how long it would take to get the material.

Fitzsimmons said CIA and NSC would be in court on Tuesday "to narrow the scope of the subpeona so we can go forward."

The requested documents include a memorandum from former CIA Director William Casey to Vice. Adm. John Poindexter,

Chemicals are causing skin cancer epidemic

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prompt international action is needed against widely used ozone-destroying chemicals that are indirectly causing skin cancers at an almost epidemic pace, scientists warned a House hearing Monday.

"At the current rate, about one in seven Americans will develop (some form of) this disease during their lifetime," said Dr. Darrel Rigel, a research physician from New York University Medical Center.

"The rate of skin cancer in the United States is increasing at a near epidemic pace," Rigel told an Energy and Commerce health and the environment subcommittee hearing on depletion of the Earth's stratospheric ozone layer.

He said physicians believe the major cuase of skin cancer is the ultraviolet rays of the sun, which are filtered by stratospheric ozone. Other witnesses said that while there is still scientific uncertainty, it appears that the ozone layer is being destroyed by chemicals such as chlorofluorocarbons.

Rigel said the estimated number of cases of malignant melanoma, the skin cancer type most often fatal, has risen eightfold in the last seven years, making it the fastest rising type except lung cancer in women.

He said that five years ago New York University researchers estimated that one in 250 Americans would develop malignant melanoma during their lifetimes and projected an increase to one in 150 by year 2000.

The recent surge in skin cancer rates, Rigel said, has forced revisions — the lifetime risk is now one in 135; the year-2000 projection is one in 90; and for 2075, it is one in three.

He told the subcommittee that not only is the skin cancer rate rising, the disease is being found in people of increasingly younger age.

2-year-old Spanish boy to lead Tibetan monks

KAPPAN, Napal (AP) — Tibetan Buddhist lamas are seeking an auspicious date to enthrone a 2-year-old Spanish boy they believe is the reincarnation of a major monastery.

The Buddhist parents of Ozel Iza Torres brought him to India last month and are planning to take him to the Kapan monastery, where he is to take the seat of the late high lama Thubten Yeshe.

But disciples in the monastery 10 miles northeast of Katmandu said they didn't know when he would arrive.

Owen Cole, 37, a disciple from Perth, Australia, said several lamas would decide the date of the ceremony and apparently are looking for an auspicious occasion.

The boy's mother, Maria Torres, 33, came to Katmandu three weeks ago with her four other children to make sure Ozel, her youngest child, will have no problems adjusting to his new home.

"Ozel is still in Delhi," Ms. Torres said Saturday. "I was waiting here for the child to be enthroned as the head lama of Kapan monastery. But I don't know whether the ceremony will take place here or in Dharamsala."

Ms. Torres said the Dalai Lama has confirmed that Ozel, born near Granada, Spain, on Feb. 12, 1985, is the reincarnation of Yeshe.

Yeshe visited Spain several times as he traveled around the world to open Buddhist teaching centers. He died in San Francisco on March 3, 1984.

The Kapan monastery operates the Mount Everest School for Buddhist Studies, where 70 young monks and 60 visitors from all over the world are undergoing training.

Before leaving Spain, Ms. Torres told the Madrid newspaper Diario 16 her biggest problem with him is having "a son and a master at the same time."

Koehler, a Stamford, Conn., resident, was one of five senior officials appointed in the final days of Donald T. Regan's troubled tenure as chief of staff, but there was no indication of other changes.

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Two cowboys have been arrested on charges of harboring Claude Dallas Jr., the fugitive killer of two game wardens who was recaptured after roaming in disguise from Oregon to Mexico for nearly a year, the FBI said Monday.

QUITO, Ecuador (AP)—At least 100 people were killed in last week's earthquakes in a jungle region 80 miles east of this Andean capital, a Napo province official said today.

Several newspapers reported that the death figure had climbed above 300, but there was no official confirmation of those reports.

MOSCOW (AP)—The Tass news agency today accused the United States of putting "extra conditions" on a Soviet offer to negotiate an agreement on removal of all superpower medium-range nuclear missiles from Europe.

Rather than limit its counter-offer to medium-range missiles, the Reagan administration demanded new limits on Soviet short-range weapons and said the United States wants the right to increase its own short-range forces.

Animal judging team captures second place

The animal judging teams placed behind Delaware Valley Agricultural College to claim the runner-up position at the 1987 Northeast Student Affiliate Association Contest held here.

The UConn teams placed first in both the livestock and horse evaluation and quiz bowl contests, but failed to enter a team in the paper presentation which ultimately cost them the championship.

Judging teams from Delaware Valley College, University of Connecticut, Pennsylvania State University, University of Maine, Cornell University and University of Vermont ranked in that order of finish in the overall competition. About 100 students from the six schools competed.

Connecticut animal judging team members Jill Perham of Cheshire and Shawn Thayer of Cummington, Mass., took first and fourth places in the individual standings. Other team members were Laura Poplowski of New Britain, and Stanley Weingart of North Franklin. All are animal science seniors in the Animal Science Department, College of Agriculture and Natural Resources, except Weingart who is a freshman in the two-year Ratcliffe Hicks School of Agriculture.

UConn quiz bowl participants were Mary Beattie of North Stonington, a sophomore; Erica Speilmann of Ellington, a junior; Rebecca Rich of Abington, a freshman in Ratcliffe Hicks, and Susan Dunney of Verona, N.J., a senior. All are animal science majors.

Man charged in bus assault

A 20-year-old Madison man was charged with assault Monday in connection with an incident that occured on a charter bus returning to campus on Dec.6.

Michael F. Mancini of 12 Grouse Lane and New Haven Hall 317, was arrested on a Rockville Superior Court warrant and charged with third-degree assault, police said.

Mancini was involved in a dispute with another passenger, police said. A third passenger intervened, and, when the bus stopped on campus, Mancini struck him and hit him about the face, police said.

Third-degree assault is a class A misdemeanor punishable by one year in prison and a $1,000 fine.

Mancini was released on a $1,000 non-surety bond pending an appearance in court March 17.

Four charged with theft

Two men and two women were charged Friday with stealing instruments from von der Mehden Recital Hall.

Louis John Ianello, 18, of 9 Lochbourne Drive, Clinton, and Litchfield Hall 317 and Christopher J. Lyons, 17, of 91 Linden Ave., Branford, were charged with third-degree burglary and fourth-degree larceny, police said. Noreen A. Galaba, 19, of 5 Glymun Ave., Middletown, and Amy L. Lusster, 18, of 24 Long Hill Drive, Glastonbury, both students at Eastern Connecticut State University, were charged with the same, said police.

The four stole two sets of cymbals, a gong, two drums and a set of bongos from von der Mehden, police said.

Third-degree burlary is a class D felony punishable one to five years in prison and a $5,000 fine. Fourth-degree larceny is class A misdemeanor punishable by one year in prison and a $1,000 fine.

The four were released on written promises to appear in Rockville Superior Court March 17.

Glastonbury man charged with credit card fraud

A 24-year-old Glastonbury man was charged Monday in connection with the illegal use of a Southern New England Telephone Company calling card.

Stefan Stanley Guzek of 1091 Hopewell Road was arrested on a Rockville Superior Court warrant and charged with accessory to illegal use of a credit card and accessory to sixth-degree larceny, police said.

On Dec.17, Guzek provided a stolen calling card number to another person, police said. The calling card was subsequently used to place two out-of-state telephone calls totalling $13.82, police said. The calling card was stolen, along with $80 from a wallet on Dec.16.

Illegal use of a credit card is a class A misdemeanor punishable by one year in prison and a $1,000 fine. Sixth-degree larceny is a class C misdemeanor punishable by three months in prison and a $500 fine.

Guzek was released on a written promise to appear in Rockville Superior Court March 17.

Fellowships available for bilingual education

Graduate fellowships are available through the School of Education in a master's degree program designed to improve the skills of teachers in bilingual-bicultural education.

The application deadline is April 3. Participants must enroll in the Graduate School.

UConn is one of 22 universities and colleges to receive special funding from the federal Department of Education for a masters degree program with emphasis in bilingual-bicultural education. The first-year grant is for $147,053 and the program is eligible for second-and third-year renewals.

Applicants for the fellowships must be able to speak English and Spanish, although instruction is included in the program to increase their bilingual proficiency.

The fellowships are available for part-time and full-time students enrolled in the Graduate School. Included are tuition, fees, a book allowance and travel reimbursement for the field experience. Full-time students who work 20 hours or less per week also are qualified for monthly stipends.

Applicants must contact the School of Education to indicate the status of their application for admission to the graduate school.

Write or call Liliana Minaya-Rowe at Box U-32, or call 486-5103.

WRTD building to start

Construction of the Windham Regional Transit District bus maintenance facility here is scheduled to get underway March 24. Groundbreaking for the $200,000 project, funded by the Urban Mass Transportation Administration of the federal Department of Transportation and the state Department of Transportation is scheduled for 10 a.m. Monday.

The two-bay garage will be an expansion of the university's existing five-bay Motor Pool Maintenance and Repair building and will provide workspace to maintain and repair the rainbow striped WRTD buses which operate between Storrs and Willimantic. The university maintains WRTD vehicles, side by side, with its own fleet.

Pelletier Builders of Coventry will construct the addition, designed by The Mead Group, a West Hartford architectural firm. While the district will have permanent use of the structure, it will be built on university land and owned by the university.

Engineering to honor alumni

The School of Engineering will honor four Distinguished Alumni Award recipients April 15 at its annual Honors Banquet at the Faculty Alumni Center.

Chosen by a committee of alumni and faculty, the 1987 award recipients are: Taylor Booth, a professor of electrical engineering and computer science until his death last October, Irwin Mendelson of Pratt & Whitney, William F. Beausoleil of IBM, Paul E. Conrad of Wilbur Smith & Associates, South Carolina.

Booth, who received his bachelor's, masters and Ph.D degrees from UConn, joined the faculty in 1959 after serving three years as a systems engineer at Westinghouse Electric Corporation in Baltimore.

A nationally known authority on computer science, Booth played a significant role in established UConn's computer science programs.

He served as the first president of the Computer Science Accreditation Board.

Each of the recipients, who were judged on their contributions to or excellence in either the practice of engineering, engineering education, research in engineering or service to the engineering profession, will receive a plaque and a citation.

Since the School of Engineering began the award program four years ago, 11 alumni have been honored.

Students getting more than credits from class

By Terence Roethlein
Daily Campus Staff

"You get a lot more than credits from this course. I doubt anybody can leave it without being affected," says Annie Wallach, a student taking Educational Psychology 262.

EPSY 262 is a special education course arranged through the Mansfield Tutorial Program. Students visit Mansfield Training Schoool on ten consecutive Thursday nights, talk with and do arts and crafts with the mentally retarded clients.

For two credits, students complete a case study of a particular client they worked with and for three credits students must also do a research paper on the type of mentally retarded client they worked with.

Wallach, who is applying to the School of Education and hopes to become a special education major, says visiting the clients and forming relationships with them makes the student realize that "in regular life we must co-exist with them."

Besides possibly affecting future career choices in the field of education, the course "makes you aware you have it a bit easier than (others)," says Wallach.

"Instead of going out and drinking on Thursday night, you can help someone out," says Wallach.

This is the third semester Wallach has participated in the tutorial progam and now is a group leader of 15 students from the course who visit clients at Lions House, a residential unit.

As a group leader, Wallach's duties include keeping a comfortable atmosphere by providing activities for the students and clients to do together. She also oversees the students and clients interaction, and sets an example for the students through relaxed friendships with the clients, Wallach says.

The clients at Lions House are lower functioning adults from 35 to 65 years old that are either mentally retarded or autistic. Besides having a "profound" or "severe" intelligence quotient (ranging from 0 to 34) many of the clients are partially blind.

Annie says that it took her, like most students, about two visits to Lions House before she was comfortable and able to talk with the clients.

"After the first time, I came back home and cried," says Wallach. "It was depressing, but you get over it. I wasn't so depressed about them being mentally retarded. I just wished they could do more."

Wallach says that being institutionalized and the fact that some clients families rarely visit with their handicapped relatives are conditions that she wishes she could do more about.

In some cases, a strong attachment is formed between students and clients, says Wallach.

For one year she has worked closely with a blind client, Robert. During her first semester with him, he didn't respond to her communication with him, and she questioned whether she was reaching him at all. Then, at the end of the semester he put his hand in hers and said her name, says Wallach.

Wallach says that since that time, she's felt close to Robert. He is now being hospitalized with a foot operation, and Wallach says she is looking forward to seeing him again.

Wallach also tells of Cathy, a very angry and bitter woman who usually only yells when people come near her. One time last year she heard Cathy singing to a record and told her she had a pretty voice. Cathy looked up, smiled , and started singing louder, and for the first time, got up and waved goodbye when Wallach left.

"I don't know if she remembers the incident, but I'll never forget it," says Wallach.

Wallach says that although the 10 sessions that make up the class do not allow enough time to make a significant change in a client, in "the amount of time the clients do have (with the students) I know they look forward to seeing us."

They know when "the kids are coming. It livens things up for them," says Wallach.

Some clients even stand at the window of Lions House, anticipating the students' arrival. On one Thursday night a client named Patty waited at the window, watching the bus of students drive up.

Wallach describes Patty as good-natured. As St. Patrick's day is coming up, the project tonight is paper shamrocks. Patty puts her shamrock on a card with a blue crayon smile face on it.

Clutching her yellow card pasted with glitter, Patty calls several times to an aide, "Look...look." The aide turns around. With red glitter on her shirt and her eyelashes, Patty looks up to her and says, "Here's a card."

Humor and high spirits are the underlying themes of the evening. David, a totally blind client, is listening to his radio. For any song he hears, he can name its title, artist , and the year it was released in about two seconds.

"Rock the Boat," by the Youth Company," says David as the tune plays in the background.

A student helps another client named Phyllis spell out her name on paper. "P-H-Y-L-L-I-S. What does it spell?" asks the student. After a delay, "Thank you!" answers Phyllis, and the two laugh.

Upon request, Harry can stretch his bright red tongue all the way up to the top of his nose, where there's a red mark, perhaps from too much of this habit.

The originator of EPSY 262, Professor John A. Pappanikou, says relaxed interaction is part of the "sensitivity" towards the mentally handicapped that is one reason for the course. Pappanikou says the course also may act as a recruitment for students into the field of special education.

Pappanikou says the Mansfield Tutorial Program began in 1975 when about 20 volunteer students from the original group asked him to be their faculty adviser.

Pappanikou doesn't regard EPSY 262 as a traditional "gut course", but just a class that is enjoyable.

"I don't think there's anything wrong with a gut as long as the mission of the class is fulfilled," says Pappanikou. "Learning doesn't have to hurt to be good. It can give pleasure."

In this course the requirements do seem to give pleasure, as the clients and students may attest. As a client named Charlie hums "Silent Night," co-director of the tutorial program, Cindy Curran, speaks of Charlie's love for carnivals and Christmas lights.

"At Christmas we took him to Constitution Plaza to see the lights, and he was beside himself, " says Curran.

Both Cindy and Charlie smile as he keeps humming.

Is it live or Memorex?

A makeshift drum kit made of two ashcans and a large cardboard circle sits atop a desk at the far end of a spotlight, set in front of a man dressed in black wearing a backwards orange baseball cap. Drumsticks flail the air, and the sounds of percussion fill the room. Guitar chords hum, and a man dressed in black knickers and a British flag t-shirt struts out, head down, strumming a racquetball racquet. Short laughs are quickly followed by words of recognition as various crowd members utter the word "Angus". Another man emerges, clad in black leather and sweats, sporting a lacross stick. A fourth member enters the spotlight, his black t-shirt missing its sleeves, his jean cuffs rolled up to mid-calve in order to show off his red high-tops. He holds the make-shift microphone to his mouth and lets loose with the opening scream.

No, AC/DC didn't come to UConn this past weekend, but the next best thing did.

This past Friday, Buckley Hall hosted its first Air Guitar/Lip Sync Contest. Postponed from last semester due to "lack of interest", the second attempt at this event didn't look too impressive at first. Only five acts signed up to battle it out for three prize slots, but that didn't matter to the audience. The crowd that gathered in Buckley's recreation room cheered in due appreciation for the various acts.

DeMartino at von der Mehden

A free concert by the UConn Jazz Ensemble conducted by Ellen Rowe will feature guest trumpeter Vince DiMartino on March 12 at 8:15 pm in von der Mehden Hall.

The Jazz Ensemble will play arrangements of standards including Lerner & Lowe's "Almost Like Being in Love" and Rogers & Hart's "Little Girl Blue". In addition to some traditional jazz pieces the ensemble will play Ellen Rowe's composition "Raison D'etre." Guest artist Vince DiMartino will join the ensemble for some tunes by Doc Severinson, Sammy Nestico and Donald Byrd.

A free lance trumpeter with jazz greats Sarah Vaughn, Dave Brubeck, Cleo Lane and Stan Getz, DiMartino is currently associate professor of trumpet and Jazz Ensembles at the University of Kentucky. He has a masters degree in jazz from the Eastman School of Music.

Conductor/composer Ellen Rowe is assistant professor at the University of Connecticut, where she teaches jazz arranging and improvization and she directs the jazz ensemble. She is a graduate of Eastman with a masters degree in jazz composition and

Drunks have a choice with 'Safe Ride' offer

You are at a party. The guy who drove you has had too much to drink, but insists he is sober enough to operate his car. You try to take the keys away from him but are unsuccessful and he drives away. One hour later, he is in the emergency room after smashing his car into a tree on his way home.

Although this scene is ficticious, similiar incidents unfortunately take place each day all over America. The end result is usually death or serious injury. In most of these accidents, innocent people are the ones who receive the serious injuries and suffer the most pain.

However, if a new program becomes popular at UConn, such incidents may some day be avoided and students won't have to worry as much about excessive drinking. The program is called "Safe Rides" and is designed to give intoxicated people an alternative to driving drunk. Instead of driving home from a bar or party, a person can call Safe Rides and a van will pick them up.

Similiar programs have worked successfully in many towns in the state and the country. It is the first time such a service will be offered at UConn and is made possible through the donation of a van from a local alcohol disributor and national beer company.

An alternative to driving drunk is exactly what UConn needs. With a number of popular nightspots located off campus, the opportunity to drink and drive is always available and creates a potentially dangerous situation.

Letting someone else do the driving is much more reasonable than attempting to "wing it" and possibly injure yourself or others. It might mean temporarily swallowing your pride, but in the long run, it is a safer and more intelligent alternative to drunk driving.

Safe Rides is an idea whose time has come. We hope students who have overdone a good time will take advantage of the service and avoid potentially life-threatening situations.

A plain woman's way of attracting 'hunks'

Denise Stanfa, 27, who is a sales representative for a corrugated box company in Dallas, describes herself as a "fun addict."

"My life is devoted to thinking up ways to pursue different avenues that will provide me with fun activities," she said.

So last summer, before a vacation trip with seven women friends, she came up with an idea.

"We were going to a place in Delaware called Dewey Beach," she said. "Dewey Beach is always covered with some of the most beautiful men you would ever want to see in your life. I'm not an ugly person, but I'm not a knockout, either. Normally I would never have a chance to meet men like that."

Thus, before leaving Dallas for Delaware, Stanfa went to a company that makes business cards.

"It was just the local Quick-Print shop," she said. "I had them print up business cards that said my name was Muffin Hardgrove, and that I was vice president of the talent division of Gentlemen's Quarterly magazine."

The minimum order was 250 cards for $25, so Stanfa left the shop with 250 cards.

"There had been several times in the past when I had posed as being someone I wasn't," she said. "Once I said I was a stand-up comic. Once my sister said she was a criminal lawyer. Once my friend Sue said that she was an artist. It's kind of fun, stepping into another role for a few days."

On the plane ride north, Stanfa handed her new business card to the two men sitting next to her.

"They were pretty impressed," she said. "That helped me make up my mind that when I got to Dewey Beach, I really was going to be Muffin Hardgrove of GQ."

Stanfa and her seven friends arrived at Dewey beach, and immediately began searching for the best-looking men they could find.

"I would walk up to the men," she said, "I would hand them my card, and say that GQ was planning a spread on the handsomest men on the beaches of the East Coast. One of my friends would have a camera set up on a tripod, and I would ask these men to come with me and pose."

Without exception, they did.

"Some of these men were absolute 10's," Stanfa said. "I had no illusions—they would never have looked at me in any other situation. But because they thought I had the power to get them into GQ, they would do anything I said.

"It was really something. These were very macho, beautiful, gorgeous hunks of men who were as egotistical as they were good-looking. The kinds of men who would never let themselves be seen on the beach with anyone less than a bronzed blond sex goddess.

"Sometimes, in fact, a man would be sitting with a woman. And I would walk up and give the man my GQ card. As soon as the woman saw what was going on, she would say to the man, 'Do it! Do it!' And the man would walk off with me."

Before too long, Stanfa and her entourage had become the center of attention at Dewey Beach.

"We would be walking to our cars at the end of the day, and guys would yell at us, 'Hey, there's the women from GQ.' There's a bar there called the Rusty Rudder,and men actually started coming up to us, to see if we wanted them to pose."

Stanfa began to wonder exactly why she was doing this. "I guess it mainly had to do with just seeing what would happen," she said. "The men treated me like I was a celebrity, and I have to admit, that felt good. I'm humble enough to know that most of the men we photographed were way out of my reach. I felt slightly deceitful. But then we'd see another gorgeous man across the beach, and we'd say, 'Let's go get him.'"

Stanfa and her friends took down the names, addresses and phone numbers of each of the men they photographed. "We told the men that our editors were going to decide which men to use in the magazine," Stanfa said. "We said that if they were selected, they'd get a call or a letter."

She told herself that there was a valid reason for what she was doing.

"I've always been interested in the psychology of what goes on in men's minds," she said. "What makes them tick. So part of me was thinking that this was a legitimate way to find out.

"But mostly, I think, I believe that life should be one big beach party movie. Life doesn't usually happen that way, and just this once I wanted it to."

Stanfa and her friends photographed more than 30 men at Dewey Beach. "Did we really hurt anybody?" she said. "I don't think so. Are their feelings going to be hurt? I don't think so.

"The pictures are great. I look at them now and say, 'Remember that guy? Wasn't he cute?'

"I've thought about the moral to all of this.

"The best I can come up with is,'A picture is worth a thousand nerds.'"

Brian Trotta

I'm really sorry this is late, Boss, but, you see...

Re: Procrastination story

Due to a few circumstances beyond my control, the story you told me to do about National Procrastination Week is late.

Members of this group, who enjoy celebrating Christmas and New Years' about the same time everyone else celebrates the fourth of July, are hard to get in touch with.

These are definitely not the, "Get it done yesterday," kind of people we normally deal with in the business world.

I first called the Philadelphia headquarters of the Procrastinators' Club of America, yesterday afternoon.

Yes, there really is a headquarters, it's not just some guy's basement. With over 5,000 registered members worldwide, and hundreds of thousands of unregistered members, (They're members, they just haven't gotten around to sending in their applications and $16 yearly dues) the club needs a headquarters.

When they picked up on the third ring, I was disappointed - I expected to have to wait until at least the fifth or sixth ring.

I was told by the secretary there to call another number, also in Philadelphia, where I would find someone who would tell me about the club.

I thought to myself, "Wow, these guys are serious, they even put off taking their own calls."

I called that number later on, where I found out that the person I needed to speak with was Les Waas, the de-facto president of the club. Les was expecting a phone call on that line, and asked if I could call him back around five.

I said no problem.

In the meantime, he said for me to try Jim Lehmann, of Stamford, Connecticut.

I dialed the number, and let it ring 12 times, just in case he was putting off answering the phone. Not only was he putting off answering the phone, he was putting off going home that afternoon.

There was no answer.

Me being the "anti-crastinator" ("one who rushes through life") that I am, I called Les back promptly at five.

Big mistake.

Les wasn't quite ready to talk to me yet.

At 5:48 p.m., I called Les again.

This time, he was eating dinner, and asked if I could call back in an hour.

Sure Les, no problem.

In the meantime, I gave Jim a few more tries. He still wasn't home.

Finally, at 7:45 p.m. I reached Les. This time, I guess he had enough of procrastinating, and finally talked to me.

However...

Les really belongs in the procrastinators club, he even speaks slowly, delaying each word as long as possible before saying it.

Les did give me a few interesting thoughts though.

He said that his family has learned to live with his procrastination, though sometimes, "It might create some hardship, depending on what you put off."

Les also gave me an interesting perspective on procrastinating. He said, "If you put things off long enough, you find it saves time, because you find that you didn't have to do it anyway."

Meanwhile back in Stamford...

Jim still had not checked in for the night as of 9:30 p.m. If he's going to make a habit of this, he should get an answering machine.

But I'll try again. Soon.

Somehow, I knew that writing a story about procrastinators on deadline would present a few unique problems, so I even made an attempt to start a back-up story, earlier in the afternoon.

But that didn't work out either.

At this point, I was getting desperate, I needed some quotes, so I called Les back and asked him if he could give me the name and number of anyone else in the club. He gave me the number of a retired dentist in Miami, Dr. Joseph H. Weiss.

When I finally got around to calling him, I knew he was my man. It took five rings for him to answer the phone.

Weiss, the secretary-treasurer of the club, wasn't quite ready to talk, so he put me on hold, while he got himself comfortable.

He told me that the club was founded in 1956, and that they will be celebrating their tenth anniversary this year, if they get around to it.

He also said that the only reason Les was the president of the club, was that after he was nominated as president in 1956, the nominating committee never got around to setting a slate for the 1957 meeting, where elections would have been held.

Dr. Weiss said that now he wants Waas' job, and will propose new nominations at the next meeting, if he gets around to it.

Weiss, like Waas, said that procrastination can be practical. He buys all his Christmas cards after the holiday, when they're 50% off, and then sends them. His only complaint is that he hasn't worked out a deal with the Post Office for half-price postage as well.

Dr. Weiss described the club as a fun loving group of business and professional people who are not ashamed to admit that they are procrastinators.

The club's slogan is, "It's never too late to procrastinate," and believe me, these people live by it, though Weiss was quick to say that his procrastination had never interfered with his professional life.

"I'm not as bad as some of the others," he said.

Weiss also said that at one time, the club's California chapter, Escargot, wanted to hold a snail race that would be updated weekly by "Wide World of Sports" over a period of two or three months.

Officials at ABC were less than enthusiastic about the idea.

The story has a lot of potential, so I don't want to give up on it yet. I'm sure that with a little more reporting, and some more time, I can make it work.

Trust me.

I will make every effort to have the story done by Thursday afternoon, or Friday morning at the latest.

Really.

I know I promised to have it done last week, but I was really busy. So many things came up all of a sudden.

The story will definitely be done by Monday.

Maybe.

Editors note: National Procrastination Week was observed last week, March 2-9. Brian Trotta, is a Daily Campus staff member, as well as a procrastinator.

Brown students say no to SAT's

Greetings from Brown University. We are a group of concerned students who would like to share with your undergraduates a referendum which we are sponsoring at Brown.

Our purpose in having the Brown student body vote on the resolution: "The College Admission office should no longer require prospective Brown students to submit SAT scores" is to determine whether this was a pressing issue within the Brown community. We believe from the initial response of our undergraduates this is indeed a timely issue.

Your school (as you know) is considered a "selective" college. The SAT according to many is an important factor only at selective colleges. We disagree that it is an important factor anywhere.

Many questions can be raised about the SAT. We believe the time has come when high school seniors across this country should stop having to pay to take a test which indicates the socio-economic position of the student's parents rather than the student's ability to work. Why do minorities do worse on the test than their educational disadvantages can account for? How substantive can the test be if some coaching companies regularly improve scores more than 150 points? How genuine are the scores if so many people are known to cheat on such poorly proctored exams? How can Educational Testing Services (ETS), which makes the SAT, be trusted to monitor its own performance when this, their most profitable test, accounts for much of their revenue?

The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, which helped the College Board create ETS, has brought to public attention in a report soon to be published that most colleges need not require their students to take the SAT, because most colleges no longer admit selectively. If they are going to let everyone in anyway, why should they require their applicants to spend time and money on a test they don't need?

This means that Brown, and your school, as well as a few other colleges who do have competitive admissions, are the only one who benefit from the program at all. If we get little use out of the SAT, why should we worry about jeopardizing its place in the testing market? When the influential Carnegie Foundation's report convinces many colleges who don't need it to actually drop it, the cost of the test will climb, and we will more urgently ask "Why not us too?"

As students at Brown we are concerned about the SAT being used on our campus. Questions of bias, inaccuracy and practicality lead us to push for a reevaluation of the SAT on our campus. The time has arrived for we, the undergraduates of "selective" colleges to question the entire testing industry in this country. Perhaps, this is an issue which members of your campus would like to raise and question.

... AC/DC imitators win contest

The contest took place in conjunction with a dorm-sponsored dance. Taking time out every once in a while, the dance floor was cleared to leave the spotlight open. Although few in number, the acts were as varied as the members at a United Nations meeting. From Marilyn Monroe to The Beastie Boys, the acts each used their own special techniques to play their respective musical roles.

The concept of air guitar/lip sync got its first real recognition with the release of the 1983 film "Risky Business", in which Tom Cruise romped about his darkened home to the tune of Bob Seger's "Old Time Rock and Roll". This act has become a popular mainstay in lip sync competitions.

Performing in air guitar/lip sync competitions is quite different from actually performing the song itself. The performers must think of their actions rather than of their musical talents. Choosing the right song is also important, so as to maximize the various stunts and skill displays that will come out, as well as find something that will appeal to the audience. Sometimes, though, the first factor takes priority.

"We took a song that wasn't popular, and we still won," said David Lennerton, who handled the "lead vocal" chores for the AC/DC imitators. He went on to state how it was the performance that mattered, not the popularity of the song.

Lennerton's words rang true at the announcing of the winners. He, along with "bandmates" Kubby Beristain (the Angus Young imitator), Chris Sinclair (guitar/bass), and Michael Grenier (drums) took first place with their pulse-pounding performance of AC/DC's "For Those About to Rock". They also attributed part of their success to the fact that the other acts "...didn't do air guitar/lip sync. They put on a show; we put on a concert."

Second place went to Thurman Matthiesen and Danny Campbell, who did a redneck romp to the tune of "The Battle of New Orleans", starting off with a short rap. Siji Obi took third with his rendition of "Mr. Big Stuff", a rap song about Pee Wee Herman.

Oh Duh-uane, Good morning. Good luck on your exams. Say hi to Alfie for me. Love, L

KAREN C. SHERMAN 4TH: HAPPY BIRTHDAY!!! TOMMOROW TOAD'S? LEAN ON ME... GET PSYCHED FOR A SUMMER AT NANTUCKET, AND LET'S NOT FORGET; ROAD TRIPS TO YALE, OUR 1ST YALE PARTY, AND OUR FAVORITE SPORTS, RUGBY AND BASKETBALL. THE CASTLE. KAREN, JUST TEN MORE MINUTES. TONIGHT WE WILL ALL CELEBRATE TO GOOD TIMES. HAPPY BIRTHDAY. LOVE, NANCY

To the girl in Ling 101 with green pants and a blue sweater, I think you're incredible. If your interested, let me know. The guy in grey and blue

To the sexy girls on Belden 3rd, especially my roommate, thanks for putting up with me. I know I was a pain in the A! I love you guys. Liz

To Leroy,
Roses are reds,
violets are blues.
Good luck on your search, for that "faggot" Tom Cruise!! Happy 22nd Birthday
A frustrated tape maker!!

Simon and Theodore, Best of luck getting thru the week. I'll admit I envy the Jamaica bound. Miss me! Simon

Happy Birthday Mike "slo-dog". Hopefully you can't read this post b-day message. Hopefully it'll take all of Spring Break to recover. The year has had a lot of great times and promises to get better... Red River, The Cape, walking home drunk through the graveyard, T-worms, and of course, head butting Webster's door. Happy hang-over, Jello

Gail: Happy Birthday you wild woman! I can't believe all that we've been through in such a short period of time. Goodnight Miss, Did you ever think M might pose a threat? 2 real fags on the bus, Get out of your car! Bret 3 a.m., Boston and the I.D. snagging, is this the boy's side? Did I really kiss him? No way! I look foward to more great times. You're the best kiddo. Love, Lisa

To the bestest twin in the world-Thanks so much for being here for me. And remember- I'm here for you! Thank you for dealing wiht my stupid expectations! I'm glad you're back. Love, Mary to the guy in the yellow sweater: thursdays are too crowded at thumper's, choose another night or place. the obvious blonde

Lucky Jon says to all those who go to WPB. Fla.-It's time to take in the sun. Heh, heh. Big B's at the beach. America. Bruce. J.D. Nice...

CYNDARUDA, Ancient Chinese Philosopher say "It is not wise for one to forget Queen of England's Birthday". Happy 19th. Love, Emperor of China, Queen of Organization, King of Pedestrians, Princess MooCow

To whoever has the auditron from the 3rd floor of the library- It is of no use to you because the machine has been disconnected. PLEASE return it to the copy center on the 1st floor. I will have to pay $100 if you don't. NO QUESTIONS ASKED. You're kindness is greatly appreciated! Plase help me out!

Lisa (alias Mom)- I know I keep doing dumb things, but bear with me, okay? You and I both know why- it's easier to give advice than to follow it! Thanks so much! Love, Mary

Kim in Ted's and Huskies on Thursday: Too bad that you had to go to Thumpers

To the girl playing frisbee in front of Wheeler D on Sunday 3/8. You were wearing brown shoes, pink socks, blue shorts, red bow, sunglasses and an x-large OP Air shirt. Strangely enoug it strongly resembles mine that disappeared from Crandall D's laundry room in December. What do you think? I'd like to know. - Annoyed in Crandall D

Sam and Ernie: Had a great time the other night. Got to do it more often. Dingo

Donna, Delta Gamma, Congratulations on your new job. You deserve the best and we're proud of you! Get psyched! Love, your secret sister!

Kim: Happy 21st! Do not study on your Birthday! Love, Marisa, Jen, Cyndi, Mike, and Fred

Conference title three straight years and into the NCAA playoffs each year. Last year Navy made it into the NCAA final eight, showcasing Robinson, and this season carry a 26-5 record into the tournament.

Robinson, who averged 59 percent from the field, averaged 27.5 points, 11.8 rebounds and blocked 142 shots — best in the nation — this season. He is the only player in NCAA history to score 2,500 points, grab 1,300 rebounds and shoot 60 percent from the field during his career.

In four seasons, he has scored 2,619 points, 1,301 rebounds and compiled a 64 percent field-goal percentage.

"I'm the only one who can stop me from scoring," Robinson said this season.

Despite having a two-year naval commitment — reduced from five years because of his height — Robinson is a likely No. 1 draft choice in the NBA draft. He tied his career high with 45 points in a loss to Kentucky this season.

Alford, a four-year starter, is third-ranked Indiana's all-time scoring leader with 2,300 points. A member of the gold-medal 1984 Olympic team, he led the Hoosiers to a 24-4 record and a share of the Big Ten Conference title this year, making 86 3-point goals (51 percent) while averaging 21.8 points.

Overall, the 6-2 guard made 49 percent of his field-goal attempts and 89 percent of his free throws.

The 6-3 Smith, another four-year starter, used his quickness to lead North Carolina in scoring with a 16.9 average, run the offense and play a key defensive role.

Smith made 51 percent of his field-goal tries, including 75 3-pointers for 41 percent from long range. He led the team in assists (5.7) and tied backcourt partner Jeff Lebo for the team lead in steals with 45.

Georgetown Coach John Thompson calls his fourth-ranked team "Reggie and the Little Miracles." He adds, "Without Reggis, there would be no miracles."

The 8-7 Williams, only senior on the squad, carried the offensive load in leading Georgetown, 26-4, to a share of the Big East Conference's regular season championship and to the postseason title.

...Jackson concentrating on last season

From back page

on the all-time list, and 1,659 RBI. With the A's, he is scheduled to serve as designated hitter, primarily against right-handed pitchers, and he was 2-for-5 Sunday in his first spring training game as the DH.

"We didn't do it just for sentiment," A's President Roy Eisenhardt said when Jackson was signed as a free agent on Dec. 24. "We think Reggie will bring back what he left with. He plays baseball hard, he plays it well and he plays it to win."

Jackson agreed.

"I don't want anything to detract from the team," he said. "The main thing to think about is being a unit and to keep the focus on that unit. I'm not planning to play after this year. But right now, I'm just concentrating on my workload and getting myself ready.

"I haven't really had time to dwell on this probably being my last spring training or this season being my last go-round. But, yes, I've thought of it."

Jackson's workload is probably the heaviest in the A's camp, a self-imposed regimen including extra batting practice and physical conditioning. He's at the age when he now finds it necessary to diet because, he notes, his 208-pound body "wants to eat."

Jackson continued living in Oakland in the off-season after being traded away in 1976. "I like the community and the fact that I've never been treated as a big deal around town," he said. "I hope I can help make the team a little better and the fans a little happier."

Jackson's 1987 contract reportedly gives him a $450,000 base salary, well under what he received at the peak of his career, and includes incentive clauses based on the team's home attendance.

He also received an unexpected bonus in a brown paper bag last weekend—a new pair of jeans from Walter A. Haas Jr., the A's owner, who is recuperating from a heart ailment. The Haas family owns the Levi Strauss Co.

...absent Clemens may be fined per day

From back page

Clemens, who led the major leagues in 1986 with a 24-4 record while pitching Boston to the pennant, earned $340,000, including $120,000 in bonus money, in his second full season. He is not eligible for salary arbitration until he becomes a three-year man.

Gorman said he had not heard from Clemens or his agents, Alan and Randy Hendricks, since the walkout.

"We'll sit and wait for a day or two, let things cool off and see what happens," Gorman said Saturday.

On Sunday, he said: "There's no indication they're going to move. If they don't contact me, I'll have to contact them, but first we'd have to make a decision on what action to take.

"Technically, we could fine Roger from the time we renewed his contract, but I don't think we'd do that. I think some sort of warning would be in order before we do anything."

Gorman said he wanted to continue to negotiate a contract acceptable to both parties, despite the renewal. He said the club offer is the same.

... men's basketball bids farewell to season

From back page

After that came what nearly everyone involved called UConn's finest moment, a 66-60 win at Boston College. Some people said the Huskies wouldn't win a game after losing Gamble and Robinson, but UConn proved the skeptics wrong.

In the final game of the year at the field house, senior center Gerry Besselink had 18 points and 16 rebounds to lead the Huskies to a 64-54 win over Holy Cross.

UConn's final win came in the final regular-season game of the year. The Huskies trailed Seton Hall 30-24 at halftime, and lost Pikiell and junior guard Greg Economou for the second half.

Playing all but 40 seconds of the half with just five players, UConn rallied for a 56-54 win. The crowd of 8,130 at the Hartford Civic Center brought the Huskies out for a curtain call.

In the Big East tournament, UConn held the lead the entire way against Boston College before finally running out of gas at the end.

Whatever the final score, the Huskies normally turned in fine efforts. The simple problem was a lack of manpower.

"You take this work ethic [installed this season] and add a few more players and you've got a hell of a team," Besselink said after the final game.

While the Huskies missed out on highly-touted Perry Carter a 6-foot-7 forward from Maine Central Institute, who chose Ohio State Monday, they've already signed Lyman DePriest, a 6-6 forward from Detroit, and are still talking to several players.

Should UConn land a couple of recruits and get Robinson and Gamble back, the Huskies can start the climb out of the Big East cellar.

Only Besselink, who finished averaging 10.3 points and 10.7 rebounds per game is graduating.

The rest of the Huskies will benefit from this year of experience, especially the freshman backcourt of George and Pikiell.

George was selected to the Big East all-freshman team and was named Big East freshman of the week three times. He finished the year averaging 10.2 points, 3.5 rebounds and with 144 assists for the season.

Pikiell averged 7.5 points and had his best game in the Big East tournament, scoring 27 points against Boston College.

Such perfomances show that there is a base to build a winner at UConn.

George said after the Big East loss that the Huskies can finish fourth in the Big East next season. That might be overly optimistic, but Calhoun will make sure UConn won't lose 19 games again.

One thing Calhoun frequently said he was concerned with was "Are we a better team than we were Oct. 15 [the first day of practice]."

The Huskies did make progress during the season, progress which must continue into next season.

Whalers sign Sherven

HARTFORD (AP)—The Hartford Whalers, in first place in the Adams Division of the National Hockey League, announced Monday the signing of forward Gord Sherven.

Sherven, 23, whose rights were obtained by the Whalers from the Edmonton Oilers last October during the NHL waiver draft, has been playing with the Canadian Olympic Team, scoring 14 goals and 22 assists in 56 games.

Sherven was a ninth-round pick by the Oilers in 1981 and played in 88 NHL games for Edmonton and Minnesota.

"Gord gives us some depth and that will help come playoff time," said Whalers President and General Manager Emile Francis.

Conference title three straight years and into the NCAA playoffs each year. Last year Navy made it into the NCAA final eight, showcasing Robinson, and this season carry a 26-5 record into the tournament.

Robinson, who averged 59 percent from the field, averaged 27.5 points, 11.8 rebounds and blocked 142 shots — best in the nation — this season. He is the only player in NCAA history to score 2,500 points, grab 1,300 rebounds and shoot 60 percent from the field during his career.

In four seasons, he has scored 2,619 points, 1,301 rebounds and compiled a 64 percent field-goal percentage.

"I'm the only one who can stop me from scoring," Robinson said this season.

Despite having a two-year naval commitment — reduced from five years because of his height — Robinson is a likely No. 1 draft choice in the NBA draft. He tied his career high with 45 points in a loss to Kentucky this season.

Alford, a four-year starter, is third-ranked Indiana's all-time scoring leader with 2,300 points. A member of the gold-medal 1984 Olympic team, he led the Hoosiers to a 24-4 record and a share of the Big Ten Conference title this year, making 86 3-point goals (51 percent) while averaging 21.8 points.

Overall, the 6-2 guard made 49 percent of his field-goal attempts and 89 percent of his free throws.

The 6-3 Smith, another four-year starter, used his quickness to lead North Carolina in scoring with a 16.9 average, run the offense and play a key defensive role.

Smith made 51 percent of his field-goal tries, including 75 3-pointers for 41 percent from long range. He led the team in assists (5.7) and tied backcourt partner Jeff Lebo for the team lead in steals with 45.

Georgetown Coach John Thompson calls his fourth-ranked team "Reggie and the Little Miracles." He adds, "Without Reggis, there would be no miracles."

The 8-7 Williams, only senior on the squad, carried the offensive load in leading Georgetown, 26-4, to a share of the Big East Conference's regular season championship and to the postseason title.

on the all-time list, and 1,659 RBI. With the A's, he is scheduled to serve as designated hitter, primarily against right-handed pitchers, and he was 2-for-5 Sunday in his first spring training game as the DH.

"We didn't do it just for sentiment," A's President Roy Eisenhardt said when Jackson was signed as a free agent on Dec. 24. "We think Reggie will bring back what he left with. He plays baseball hard, he plays it well and he plays it to win."

Jackson agreed.

"I don't want anything to detract from the team," he said. "The main thing to think about is being a unit and to keep the focus on that unit. I'm not planning to play after this year. But right now, I'm just concentrating on my workload and getting myself ready.

"I haven't really had time to dwell on this probably being my last spring training or this season being my last go-round. But, yes, I've thought of it."

Jackson's workload is probably the heaviest in the A's camp, a self-imposed regimen including extra batting practice and physical conditioning. He's at the age when he now finds it necessary to diet because, he notes, his 208-pound body "wants to eat."

Jackson continued living in Oakland in the off-season after being traded away in 1976. "I like the community and the fact that I've never been treated as a big deal around town," he said. "I hope I can help make the team a little better and the fans a little happier."

Calhoun hopes 9-19 record won't happen again

Clemens could be fined

By Dave O'Hara
Associated Press Sports Writer

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP)--The Boston Red Sox announced today that they will fine AWOL pitcher Roger Clemens $1,000 per day starting Wednesday unless he returns to camp.

The team said the fine would be for violation of his contract by the American League Cy Young Award winner and Most Valuable Player, who walked out of camp last week when he could not come to terms on a new contract.

Earlier, General Manager Lou Gorman said "nothing has changed" in the contract talks.

Clemens cleared out his locker and left camp during practice Friday morning after the Red Sox flatly rejected his bid for $2.4 million for two years.

Instead, the Red Sox, who had offered $500,000 and bonus incentives worth another $350,000, automatically renewed his contract for $450,000 for 1987.

One season left for Reggie

By Eric Prewitt
Associated Press Sports Writer

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP)—On Reggie Jackson's last swing around the American League, he'd like to hear baseball fans cheering him for base hits rather than for memories.

"I don't want a lot of hoopla. Because I'm a lot of hoopla, anyway," the 40-year-old Jackson said with the wide smile he usually wears between the more serious moments of the game he's played professionally for 21 years.

Jackson will be ending his career with the Oakland A's, the team he helped lead to three world championships in the early 1970s and rejoined over the winter after spending 11 seasons with other American League clubs.

His career totals include 548 home runs, ranking him sixth

NEW YORK (AP) — David Robinson, the 7-foot-1 center who has been responsible for Navy's sudden success over the past three seasons, is the only unanimous selection of the 1986-87 Associated Press college basketball All-America team announced Monday.

Also chosen to the first team were Steve Alford of Indiana, the only repeater; Kenny Smith of North Carolina, Reggie Williams of Georgetown and Danny Manning of Kansas, a junior and the only underclassman.

The team was chosen by a 10-member AP panel of sports writers.

Basketball loses recruit

The men's basketball team suffered a loss Monday, as top recruit Perry Carter chose to attend Ohio State.

Carter a 6-foot-7 forward from Maine Central Institute, was the Huskies top priority. He was considered one of the top two unsigned players in the nation.

Carter had narrowed down his choices to Ohio State, Duke, Boston College and UConn before he announced his decision at a news conference,

UConn has signed one recruit for next season, 6-foot-6 forward Lyman DePriest from Detroit, who signed during the November early signing period.

The Huskies are still recruiting at least 10 players.

Daily Campus Staff

Say what you will about the 1986-87 basketball season, it was certainly interesting.

Separated shoulders, bus crashes, sprained ankles, academic ineligibilities and concussions were all major parts of a 9-19 season.

First-year coach Jim Calhoun knew it wouldn't be easy when he took the job May 15, and his suspicions were realized even before the season started.

Still, after the final game of the season Thursday, a 61-59 loss to Boston College in the preliminary game of the Big East Tournament, Calhoun expressed no regrets.

"I told them [the players] I'm very pleased to be coaching in Storrs, Connecticut," Calhoun said. "I'm not pleased with 19 losses. That's not going to happen again."

There were many things which occured this season that aren't likely to happen again.

UConn faced opening the season with just eight scholarship players, but only seven were healthy to start the season, as freshman guard Steve Pikiell separated a shoulder before the first practice Oct. 15 and was set back.

Pikiell played a Nov. 13 exhibition game against the Melbourne Tigers, but fell on his shoulder diving for loose ball with just seven seconds to play. He would be out until Dec. 23.

It looked like it would be a long season, when, in the opening game, UMass took leads of 6-0 and 11-2. The Huskies rallied, however, and won the game 58-54.

UConn and Yale played one of the most exciting games of the year, which Yale won 77-75 in overtime. Sophomore guard Phil Gamble had tied the game with a three-point shot at the end of regulation.

After a win over Central Connecticut, the Huskies then played one of their better games of the year — and lost by 18 to then fourth-ranked Purdue.

The road was to get rockier.

Many basketball teams have trouble on the road, but UConn really had trouble on the road Dec. 9.

The team bus hit a parked car on the Massachusetts Turnpike, as the Huskies headed to Boston University. UConn had to wait for another bus to arrive from Storrs, and the scheduled 8 p.m. game got underway at 9:45.

The Huskies lost the game 80-71, but considered themselves fortunate that nobody was injured.

While nobody was hurt, UConn was robbed — robbed of two points that is. A BU student scorekeeper took away a Husky basket, and, when she was questioned, left the court in tears.

For the next game, in Storrs, both the UConn and Rhode Island teams got to the game in plenty of time. It was the referee who was late, due to a snowstorm. The game, which the Huskies won 96-94 in overtime, was delayed an hour.

As the Connecticut Mutual Classic opened, UConn appeared in good shape, coming off a win over Fairfield in which Pikiell was finally able to return to the lineup.

But in practice before the tourney opener against Hartford, freshman point guard Tate George, who'd been playing nearly 40 minutes per game, and freshman reserve forward James Spradling both sprained their ankles. The Huskies lost to Hartford, 49-48.

George and Spradling saw limited playing time in a loss to Syracuse, both were ready to face Seton Hall.

UConn, with five players in double figures, led by sophomore forward Cliff Robinson with 19 points, upset the Pirates 77-68.

After a loss to Providence, another Husky, this time junior forward Jeff King, suffered a sprained ankle, which hampered his performance for several games. UConn had three players, King, George and Spradling, who played with aircasts to protect their ankles.

On Jan. 24, the Huskies lost to Providence 61-53. It was to be the last game of the season for Robinson and Gamble, the leading and third-leading scorers on the team.

Robinson and Gamble lost their eligibility for academic reasons.
